My old, trusted NetNewsWire has a new beta version and while syncing is promised, it's sure not there now and they don't say what form it will take.. I apologize for having yet another RSS story For those who live and die by your RSS feeds, you may want to listen up, I have a fantastic and very versatile app called ReadKit from Hungarian developer Webin to tell you about.. With Google, I was using the service not for its web app but as a way to sync different apps across different platforms.. It served me well Then the apocalypse happened I went with Feedly as my new service of choice, but for the last two weeks have been stuck on the web interface as no desktop Mac apps supported it that I knew off.. For those of you who aren't RSS dependant, I know you're sick to death of hearing about services post Google Reader.. Web interfaces have come a long way, but they'll never be as fast as something native.. There had been a graveyard of RSS apps in my wake before I finally found one I liked, NetNewsWire by Black Pixel. e828bfe731 Word 2011 For Mac High Sierra
